

This handbook is written for you - the student who wants answers to critical questions about going to a Canadian university.

Even with expert advice, it can be difficult to make good decisions about questions like:

- is university the right place for me?
- what kind of university should I be considering?
- what are the steps I have to take in Grade 12 to get into a university?
- what program in the university should be my first choice?
- where will my university education lead?

This step-by-step handbook is designed for you, working through many university related questions on your own. By completing the steps in this handbook you will have the answers to many of your questions about attending university.

This handbook moves from general issues (e.g., What are the good and not so good reasons for going to university?) to more specific issues such as how to get the money to attend university and how to select courses.

How Do I Fit With University?

A critical step in preparing for university involves examining closely your interests, abilities and desires.

There are hundreds of career interest inventories, skills assessments, personality quizzes, temperament workshops and lifestyle questionnaires that are available if you choose to take them. However, doing your own self-directed search can often produce the insights that you need to make critical decisions.

Your personal experiences, behaviours and choices made in the past will lead you to understand the basis for making university related decisions.

A self-directed search leads to conclusions about your values, your favourite pastimes, your favourite past experiences, your frustrations and your expectations of others and yourself. It also leads to conclusions about your talents, skills, abilities, strengths and natural gifts.

High school students like Paige and Samir

work with you, exploring ideas about going to university.

Thinking About University

Discovering who you are is an ongoing process. We all change and grow, making the self-directed search a fluid and continuous process. Attending university is a new beginning.

You have a blank sheet, to be filled in as you wish. Examining yourself allows many choices to automatically fall into place. It is worth the time spent on introspection and conversations with family and friends.

Paige is a Grade 12 student who is thinking about going to university but who has no idea where to begin. She is going to work through the Self-Directed Search below. At the end of this chapter you can see what Paige wrote in her Self-Directed Search and how those reflections compare to what you wrote.

Here are my favourite things to do:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

This is what I value most in my friends:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

My favourite school subjects are:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

I am strong, talented and skilled in the following areas:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

My greatest accomplishments, my proudest moments and my most meaningful experiences have been:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

These are the things I would not want to live without:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____